Support from our donors provides a vital source of unrestricted income and helps us stay connected to our base.

We receive general support and project grants from progressive foundations.

We keep our fees and products affordable so small and grassroots groups can access them.

Administrative costs are an investment in the healthy working environment and infrastructure that keep our programs high-quality.

We keep our fundraising and event expenses fairly low with the help of many volunteers.

The 2014 Money for Our Movements conference was held in Baltimore, MD—the first time outside of the San Francisco Bay Area. Nearly 700 social justice fundraisers joined us to sharpen their skills and build community with one another.

We provided training and consulting to groups around the country to strengthen their grassroots fundraising and connections to their community.

Subscribers to the Grassroots Fundraising Journal continue to receive practical tips and tools that are relevant to small- and medium-sized organizations.

Our movement building program includes our participation in social justice conferences and convenings, as well as our work in creating collaborative opportunities between social justice organizations working in communities of color.
